

Kramer stirs breyani pot

And it's spiced with pathos, humour and infectious rhythm, writes Marianne Thamm

BREYANI is a special dish of contrasting flavours that eventually settles into one delicious, nutritious whole. The recipe arrived in South Africa via Persia, and it is a versatile dish that easily accommodates regional palates.

Which is probably why David Kramer settled on it as a title for this rollicking showcase of some of Cape Town's finest musical talents, as well as the province's unique musical traditions.

INTELLIGENT: David Kramer

various accomplished collaborators, including the late Taliep Petersen and many of the individuals who make up the 11-piece "band" for this show, have spent a lifetime exploring, adapting and establishing the sounds and rhythms that have featured in the lives of generations of Capetonians.

Any show hosted or pulled together by Kramer will not be a mere koncert of merrymaking and fun. He always brings depth, intelligence and, of course, humour to the journeys he helps us to take into ourselves via the music that has given expression to our lives. The playlist for this show provides a great balance of traditional and original work, not only of Kramer's own unique blik style, but also arrangements and songs by band members Gammie Lakay and the hugely accomplished Camillo Lombard.

Seasonal sparkle and familiar hits

ZINGI MKEFA

THIS musical revue features four singers belting songs to backing tracks of hits such as Stop! In The Name of Love by the Supremes and Paradise Road by the all-girl group Joy; the show hits all the familiar notes we've heard so many times.

stars, with Phumi Mncayi acting as the flamboyant MC-come-radio DJ named DJ Mouse Click Click. The women certainly make these songs their own. When singing Tina Turner's Proud Mary or When the Heartache is Over, neither of them tries to imitate Turner's growl and feisty attack. Unfortunately, they also lose the dynamic energy that make Turner's songs so electric. As a result, during Proud Mary, you can't help but realise that in her 70s, on high-heeled shoes, Turner has way more energy than these three women put together.

PLAYING NICELY: Danel van der Walt, Anel Situlweni and Ntombi Makhutshi. Picture: Megan Choritz

Marlene (Van der Walt) is basically out to lunch, but in a nice way. The first half of the play is spent agonising over what direction to take, which is where each actor essentially gets a chance to establish their character. The second half is the Activity itself. The cast clearly had a lot of fun workshoping the play, and with Choritz's skilled hand at the helm, have developed a fun piece of theatre that doesn't demand too much from an audience other than exercising one's laugh muscles. The second half, particularly, is where things really start happening. An alternative version of the nativity story unfolds, featuring hilarious props, clever product placement (one way of boosting that shoestring budget) and a Ladysmith Black Mambazo routine that is priceless. It's nicely offbeat and smartly delivered. But the first half could do with some serious cutting, and an interval isn't necessary. The show is perfect for the season, given a slice of nifty editing.

When society fails to protect kids

SUFFER the children. These words sum up the sordid tale that emerged from the bail hearing of a grandfather, his wife and six family members who are accused of sexually molesting, raping and producing pornographic films of four children aged between four and 15.

We know that the world we live in is sick, but the idea that parents and grandparents - people in whom a child puts complete trust - could sexually molest their own and make pornographic films which they pass on to others to watch is too ghastly to contemplate. But here we were, listening to the repugnant tale of a family of eight, whose ages range from 26 to 61, appearing in court for rape, indecent assault, manufacturing and distributing pornographic material of these children.

PINKY KHOABANE

The eight are a grandfather, 58, grandmother, 57, their sons, 34 and 36, the wife of one of the brothers, 26, the grandfather's brother, 61, his wife, 42, and their mentally disabled son.

Yep, a mentally disabled person is among those allegedly involved in abusing others. What the heck is this world coming to? According to the intricate testimony - during which the grandfather tried to exonerate himself from the sexual violation of a foster daughter - we heard how, over a period of almost six years, someone in whose care the child had been placed knew that the child was being molested. The grandfather and his wife, social workers and a district surgeon all knew that the child had been abused, but they did nothing.

Well, the grandfather said that every effort to have the child seen by a psychologist was hindered by the social workers, and when the child eventually saw a psychologist, nothing came of it. He claimed that, from the day the girl arrived in his home for foster care, he had raised the issue of possible sexual molestation with the social workers. The child was wearing a garment which had semen on it, which he said raised suspicion that she might have been molested before coming into his care. After numerous complaints about her behaviour, including fondling other children, they were told that children played like that and that they should speak nicely to her and she would stop. The family eventually took her to a doctor, who confirmed that she had been sexually molested only a few days before. The doctor
